

JAPAN AND THE CHINESE REVOLUTION

“The Japanese Reformation is the first step of the Chinese Revolution; the Chinese Revolution in turn is the second step of the Japanese Reformation. Thus the Chinese Revolution and the Japanese Reformation are interrelated. It is to be regretted that the Japanese after the success of their Reformation and the rise of their country to a great Power, have forgotten the failure of the Chinese Revolution. This is the reason why the sentiments between China and Japan are ever getting further apart.”

— Dr. Sun Yat-Sen in a press interview at Nagasaki on November 3, 1924, aboard the "Shanghai Maru."